Pay for psychotherapy yourself? Advantages as a self-payer in a private practice

As a self-payer of psychotherapy you enjoy the advantage of absolute discretion, because in this case there is no need to apply for reimbursement of costs and thus no need to prepare a report for the health insurance company. To be reimbursed for the costs of psychotherapy, all statutory and many private health insurance companies require a psychological report stating a psychological disorder (diagnosis according to ICD 10). Depending on your profession, planned change to a private health insurance or additional insurance, daily allowance insurance, conclusion of an insurance policy, etc., this may be important and make a self-payment worth considering for you, as details of treatments of the last five to ten years are often requested.
