About History Dialogues

History Dialogues brings together student-researchers from around the world, including refugee and migrant learners, and supports them in planning, conducting, and sharing original historical research. The map on the cover shows where HD students live and work. HD is part of the Global History Lab at Princeton University.

Notes for Attendees

Thank you so much for joining us for the inaugural History Dialogues conference. The following guidelines are meant to ensure an inviting and enjoyable conference for all.

Viewing the conference

You will receive a unique link to the conference via email before September 24. This link will allow you to view all conference sessions. We ask that you leave the conference and rejoin for every new session, which gives conference presenters time to prepare before the start of each session.

Asking questions

Time permitting, there will be a chance for audience questions at the end of every session. You can either write your questions in the chat or type a "1" in the chat if you'd like to deliver your question orally. Please remain on mute until invited to ask a question.

Recording

All sessions will be recorded so that HD staff can provide feedback to student-researchers. Recordings of audience members will not be shared outside of course staff.
