NEWS

As we emerge from the state of emergency, some of us will be trying to pick up the pieces of our lives. Many salaried workers and those that were able to telecommute perhaps weren't affected so much, but there are many that were.

The government was slow to help by promising all residents with ¥100K, many of whom needed said help back in March.

Do you think the government has failed the country on this matter, or do you think they are doing the best in an unprecedented crisis? Do you think all this money (totaling at ¥46.6 billion) would have been better spent on something else?

The other key policy implemented as a result of the pandemic is the infamous 'Abenomasks' which, like the financial aid, has been incredibly slow and many people still haven't received any masks at all.

Do you think the government is out of touch with the people of this country?

Has this crisis changed your opinion about PM Abe and his cabinet's abilities?

Discuss.
